THE INVENTORY OF VET PROVIDERS IN ARMENIA

I. Introduction

It is known that vocational education implies the processes of training, re-training and re-qualification. In the Republic of Armenia these processes are fulfilled both in formal and in non-formal educational ways. It is performed by the state, private organizations and NGOs. Such variety of VET is performed in a legal form; however, in practice partially there is also non-legalized and shadow vocational training, which is performed by individual entrepreneurs.

The objective of this study is to explore the VET providers in the Republic of Armenia.

To do that in the initial stage one has to:

1. Discover the providers of vocational education (training), re-training and re-qualification;
2. Differentiate the VET providers: as by division of public sectors (state, private, public);
3. Differentiate the VET providers: as by types of education (formal and non-formal);
4. Differentiate the VET providers: as by level of education (preliminary professional (craftsmanship) and middle professional education);
5. Differentiate the VET providers: as by professional orientation;
6. Differentiate the VET providers: as by marzes.

The inventory of VET providers and their differentiation as by the aforementioned will enable to get the preliminary picture of VET providers in Armenia and its analysis will enable to diagnose the existing problems of the system.

II. The Material and Methodology of the Study

According to the above-mentioned objectives of the study it is necessary to outline the discovery list of providers of vocational education, re-training and re-qualification in the Republic of Armenia. While developing the latter the differentiation of VET providers as by the above-mentioned parameters, have been taken into account i.e. the providers of vocational education/training, re-training and re-qualification have been identified:

- which type of property belong to: state, private, NGO;
- perform formal or informal education;
- which level of vocational education is provided by: preliminary vocational (craftsmanship), middle vocational;
- in which marz and town is located.

And finally, in case of possibility, in that list the target groups of population will be mentioned, for whom those courses are designated for (unemployed, refugees, disabled, freedom fighters, poor people, etc).

Official and nonofficial sources were used in order to fulfill the discovery list of VET providers in the Republic of Armenia.

To collect official information letters were forwarded to the ministries and agencies of RA Government. RA National Statistical Service and State Tax Service have officially refused the request reasoning that the given information is a state secret.

Official information was received only from RA Ministries of Health, Agriculture, Trade and Economic Development.

Nonofficial information was collected from the selective social polls. As a preliminary basis for the data collection the following served as basis of information:

1. “Spyur” information portal (2003);
2. SP INFO phone information portal (2002);
3. Web page of training and media center for NGOs of Armenian Congress of America in Armenia (2004);
4. Information guidebook of organizers of adults’ training (2003);
5. Own information of the authors of the study.

The above-mentioned preliminary sources of information have contained various startup data. The information concerning the training, re-training and re-qualification has been in constraint and needed to be rectified. This issue especially was about the providers of informal education.

The most complete information was about the providers of middle professional and preliminary professional (craftsmanship) education in the state institutions, where there was a clear identification about the types of professions taught in every institution.

The data on enterprises (factories, construction companies, offices, agencies, etc.) contained only address and telephone or data about the major and secondary activities. The complete information was mentioned only in cases of individual organizations.

The preliminary information on NGOs was mainly about their mission, projects and provided services.

Thus, there emerged an issue of telephone social polls, which was carried out within the scope of study of the given sector.

The telephone survey in particular contained the following questions. Does the given institution, enterprise, organization provide courses of training, re-training and re-qualification? If it does, then for which groups of population: for example workers, office employees, unemployed, children, retired people, and other target groups. Who is in charge of carrying out those courses, where, what is their duration and orientation.

The results of telephone survey come to prove that in the startup information sources the data have been not only limited and needed clarification and completion, but often contained unreliable, incorrect and incomplete information, which made the need of re-clarification necessary and appropriate.

III. The Results of Survey and Analysis

The analysis of the survey material has been conducted in accordance with the above-mentioned issues and their relevant methodology.

1. Identify the list of organizations providing vocational education, re-training and re-qualification in RA.

The list includes 5 characteristics of the organizations:

- i. The name of the VET provider;
- ii. The legal-organizational form of the VET provider (state non-commercial organization /SNCO/, closed joint-stock company /CJSC/, limited liability company /LTD/, cooperative, entrepreneur, non-governmental organization /NGO/);
- iii. The location of the VET provider (settlement);
- iv. The address and telephone number of the VET provider;
- v. The training services provided by VET provider of the organizations providing with vocational education, re-training and re-qualification.

2. Differentiation of VET providers as by form of ownership (state, private, public (societal)).

Table 1 contains the breakdown of VET providing organizations as by forms of ownership of the discovery list:

Table 1.

	VET providers' form of ownership	Number	%
1.	State organization (SNCO, CJSC)	114	29.9
2.	Private organization	80	20.9
3.	Public	187	49.2
Total		381	100

According to the data identified in the Table 1 NGOs have the largest portion of all the organizations providing VET - approximately 50%. This comes to speak about NGOs playing increasingly big role in Armenia, will of the people to get together in an NGO and free expression of their capacities.

According to the calculations the second place is with state organizations providing vocational education and training. They form 1/3 of all the organizations included in the discovery list. With its fundamental training character the state continues to play a prestigious and stable role in the domain of vocational education and training.

According to the above-mentioned data the third place is with the private organizations. The compose 1/5 of organizations included in the discovery list. The relative scarcity of the latter is explained by the transition nature of the economy. The transitions from the planned economy to the free market relationships require not only capital investments, professional knowledge and skills in organizing and managing the education and training, but also capacity to take the risk.

The vivid example for it is the breakdown of organizations providing vocational training, re-training and re-qualification as by legal-organizational form as quoted in Table 2.

Table 2

	VET providers' organizational-legal form	Number	%
1.	SNCO	111	29.1
2.	CJSC	10	2.6
3.	LTD	70	18.4
4.	COOP	2	0.5
5.	Individual entrepreneurs	1	0.3
6.	NGO	187	49.1
Total		381	100

As one can see from the table the total number of cooperatives and entrepreneurs is tiny – less than 1%.

3. Differentiation of the VET providers as by forms of training.

The breakdown of organizations providing VET as by types of training is quoted in Table 3:

Table 3

	VET providers as by form of education	Number	%
1.	Formal VET	142	37.3
2.	Non formal VET	239	62.7
Total		381	100

According to the data quoted in table 3 the number of organizations providing informal education/training is prevailing. Mostly private organizations and NGOs provide informal vocational education or training. Formal education/training is carried out by state and private middle professional and preliminary professional (craftsmanship) educational institutions.

4. The differentiation of VET providers as by the levels of vocational education – middle vocational education, preliminary professional (craftsmanship) education.

The breakdown of organizations providing VET as by levels of education is quoted in Table 4:

Table 4.

	VET providers by the level of vocational education	State		Private
		Number	%	Number	%
1.	Middle vocational education	85	73.3	31	26.7
2.	Preliminary vocational (craftsmanship) education	37	100	0	0
Total		122	79.7	31	20.3

According to the data quoted in table 4 no preliminary professional education (craftsmanship) is provided in private organizations. This is probable explained by the fact that the organization of vocational education of that level continues to be of low demand and as a business is not profitable.

According to the discovery list of VET providers in the state organizations of providers of middle professional education more than 100 professions are taught. 11 of those state institutions also carry out preliminary professional (craftsmanship) education for 7 professions.

5. The differentiation of VET providers as by professions' orientation.

Table 5 shows the breakdown of VET providing organizations quoted in the discovery list as by professions' orientation. The data are about the providers of informal education.

Table 5.

	VET providers by orientation of the courses	Number	%
1.	Accountancy	13	5.2
2.	Languages	46	18.3
3.	IT	68	27.1
4	Services	4	1.6
5	Small and Medium Entrepreneurship	29	11.6
6	Crafts	44	17.5
7	Others	47	18.7
Total		251	100

According to the data of table 5 the greatest share among the providers of informal education belongs to the providers of IT training. It is conditioned by more or less mandatory requirements of computer skills on behalf of employers, irrespective of professional education of the potential employee.

The third place belongs to the organizations providing foreign language training. These are mainly courses of English, then French, German and Spanish. There are courses of Russian, Greek, Japanese and Hebrew. There are rare courses of Armenian. It is notable that one of the organizations has organized a special course of Armenian for refugee teachers.

The fourth place belongs to the organizations providing training of various crafts. Those provide courses of garment design, jewelry, gem cutting, carpet weaving and other professions. It is worthwhile to mention that 44 NGOs implement training of crafts; however, most of that training is of amateur nature.

The fifth place belongs to the organizations providing courses of medium and small business and the next are the organizations providing accounting courses. The last place belongs to the organizations providing vocational courses of various service professions. These (re) train hairdressers, visagiste, manicurist, masseur, bar tenders, etc.

The second place belongs to the organizations, which provide courses of clustered professional orientation of “others” type, i.e. psychologists, psychotherapist, psychiatrist, homeopaths, journalists, sociologists, lawyers, puppet makers, drivers, auditors, farmers, social workers, disabled musicians and musician-teachers.

They also implement re (training) and re-qualification courses for specialists of security systems, insurance, taxation, gas domain, tourism; real estate and advertising agents and others.

It is worth mentioning that some organizations provide courses of several professional orientation (for instance languages and accounting, IT and foreign languages, etc), as a result of which the aggregate amount of organizations providing informal education quoted in table 5 will exceed their real number, which is quoted in table 3.

6. The differentiation of VET providers as by their marz allocation.

Table 6:

According to the analysis of the table 8 the majority of the organizations providing VET is located in Yerevan. Not only the state institutions providing vocational education are concentrated here, but also NGOs and private providers. With a considerable concession to the capital the relevant organizations of Shirak and Lori marzes have serious weight.

The most of organizations providing formal vocational education is located in former regional centers¹. In regard of vocational education Tavush, Armavir and Vayots Dzor marzes are the weakest.

The private organizations providing VET are operating mainly in Yerevan. One such organization runs in Lori and Syunik marz each.

The analysis of the collected material shows that the courses of adult education, re-training and re-qualification carry vocational, as well as general character.

¹ Formerly Armenia was divided into 37 regions

The courses aimed at awareness raising, acquisition of life skills and various amateur activities of individual are very popular with training providers. These courses are mainly performed by NGOs.

The courses of awareness raising are about the human rights and environment protection, sexual education, AIDS issues, etc. In regard of human rights as a target group there are unemployed people, refugees, disabled people, freedom fighters, poor people, and people with no work experience, women and young people. The courses aimed at the acquisition life skills are provided for special groups (disabled people, the ones that take care of them, members of died military people), as well as the population without any differentiation.

IV. Conclusion and Recommendations

The issues of vocational education are very urgent not only for the development and improvement of individual, self-esteem of the person, improvement of his social welfare and family development. The effective solution of these issues, first of all is important for the establishment and development of Armenian statehood, that's why those have state and national strategic significance.

Based on the study one can say that at present the vocational education is carried out mainly spontaneously without taking into account and forecasting the perspectives of socio-economic development of the country.

Which sectors of the economy, areas of science and education need to be supported, which one of them needs to be developed and improved? What and how many specialists need be trained to contribute to the development of specific sector, area, in which educational institutions, which are the sources of financing, mechanism, what forms of campaigning and encouragement will be applied, etc?

In order to pose such questions, to look for ways for their solutions and to find them one requires serious studies. The social surveys have in important role to play here.

In this case it is preferable to conduct social polls with the representatives of both government and politics. At the same time one needs to survey the professionals of specific sector of the economy, area of science and culture; specialists and scientists. The direction of vocational guidance of the population shall become a subject of a special study.

Only these three studies one by one and their comparison can give the picture that will discover the position of authorities and opposition, employers, experts, professionals and scientists and finally ordinary citizens towards this issue.

The findings can serve as a serious basis for the effective implementation of reforms of the system of vocational education.

Autonomously or in parallel with the above-mentioned the monitoring of media can be considered as a social poll with a specific analysis method with an objective to raise and supervise the problems of this issue.
